THE EPIC ISSUE

BEAUTIFULLY CRUSHED

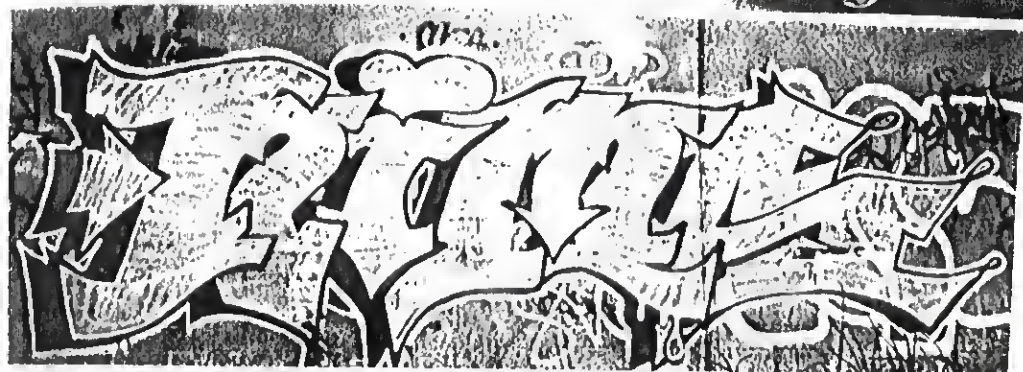

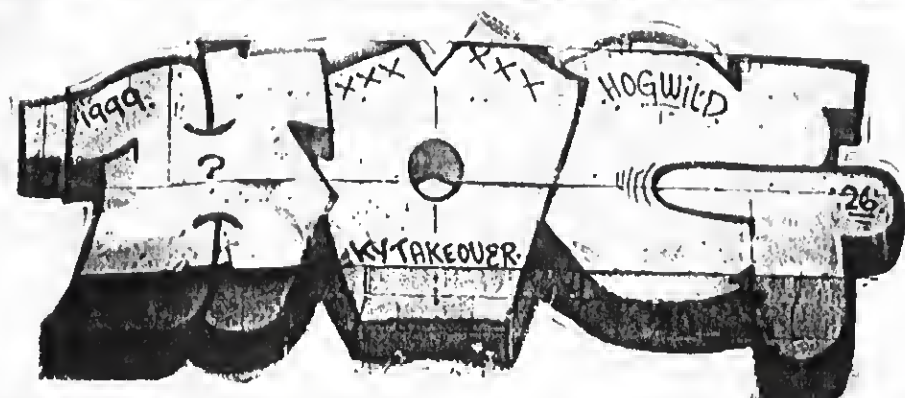

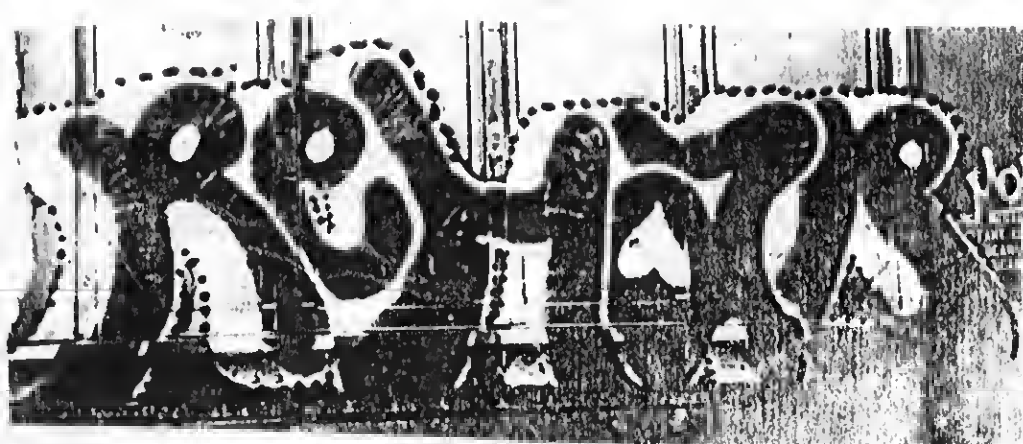

him looking in my backpack. By now there was a third cop and we were already in handcuffs. The cop read through a notebook in my bag and noticed the beginning of what was to be this article. My insult to police got under this guys skin and he stated, mockingly, that he was too unintelligent to be offended by my writing. But I could tell he was heated. Luckily that terd left and we managed to agree to paint over the whole wall between the other two cops and the manager at the business. If that other cop would have stayed we would have gone to jail for sure. We compromised intelligently rather than being charged with "crimes" and put in jail.

All I persue in this world is real life and love. I don't really care about the capitolist evil that attempts to run me and drain my energy. I just wont take their shit, I wont let them get to me. I just wish the evil could be crushed but they are too strong and have planned this set up for too long. If you're not rich than you're not really in the game, you'll just get beat and beat again until you submit. So life is a big ball of shit!!? Can I find happiness? I get short term happiness and then it all seems to fall flat, leaving me wishing it was still here. I'm getting a little off track so I'll conclude with this: Police are here to preserve the orders of the government which pays them with our taxes(the nice thirty percent of your check missing on payday). They are machines that are programmed and rarely have emotions. There are those situations when a cop actually does a good job. So this isn't just some blind attack. There are just too many worthless police out there and too many worthless people who don't know any better but to blindly support these punk ass officers. I just hope people will educate themselves to the realization of the corruption around them.....protect and serve the people huh? Since when is protecting and serving beating up innocent, peaceful protesters? You aren't serving the majority. Since when is it within the police rights to hurt people arrest people who actually have something to say? Oh well fuck it, maybe just kill me.- the ahol 2000

I think that they are fully aware that they're criminals in uniform. If they didn't have the badge they'd probably be in jail just like the people they arrest. The average officer doesn't have any qualities that I've seen within their personality. These people are not required to be good honest human beings. They've got the job as long as they haven't committed any crime yet. When they get their shiny badge it's almost an excuse to become the criminal they've been longing to be. These people are fucking pathetic to me and I hate them so much. And the shit they've put me through lately makes me a hater for life.

Ex4 We and my friend were painting what was supposed to be a legal wall when a female cop pulls up and begins questioning us. She was called in by the workers across the way, clueing us in that this wall had never been legal. Another cop pulls up and this guy's just a big dickhead. He's being a smart ass right off the jump, he didn't believe us that we were told that it was a legal wall. It was the middle of the day in plain

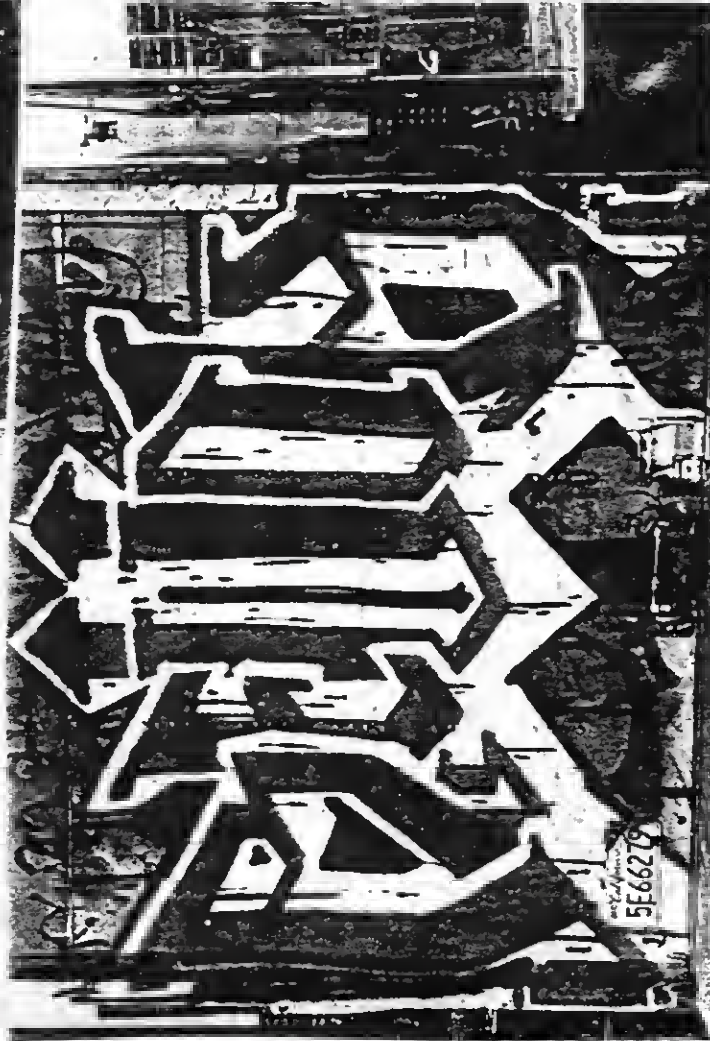

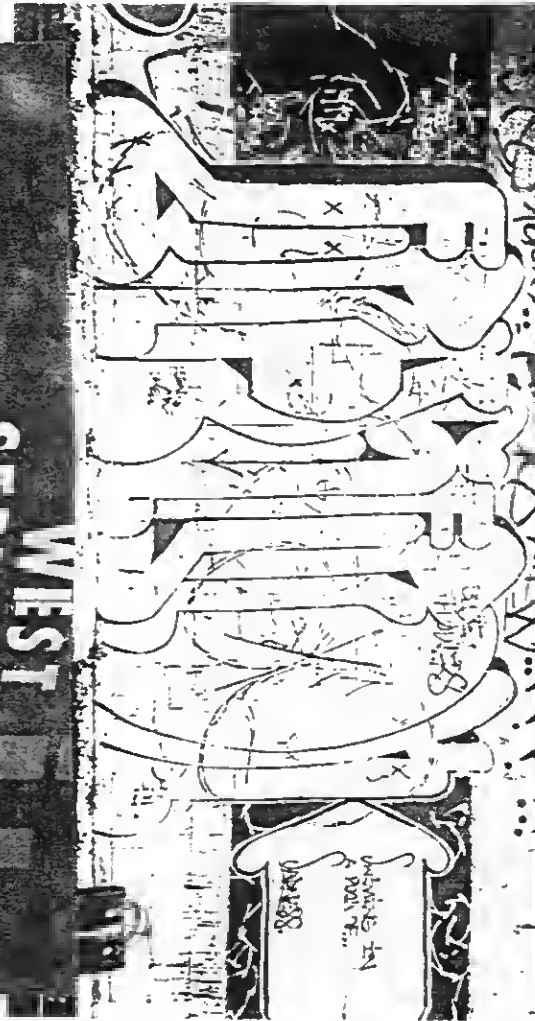

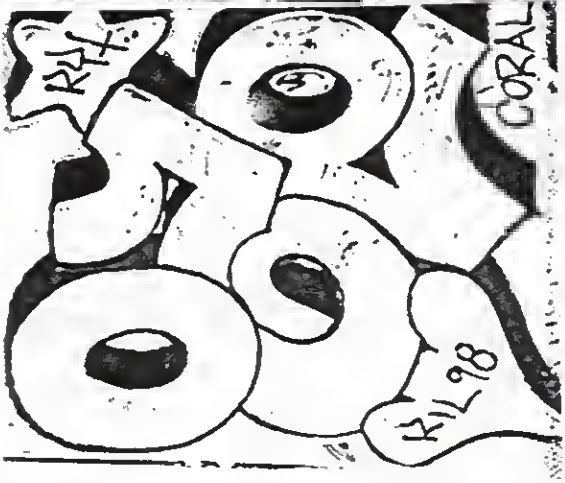

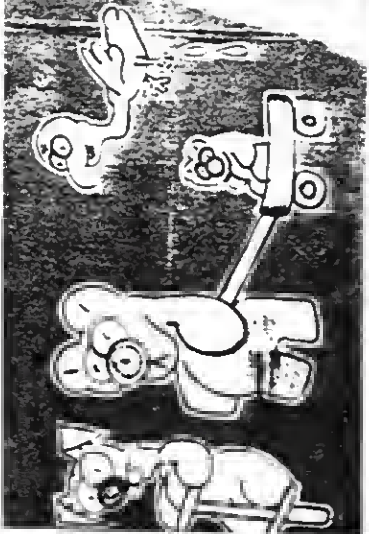

The police are very, very dangerous. It's bad enough that they have high-powered automatic pistols with special shattering ammunition that is banned even in warfare for being too inhumane. It's bad enough that they've got chemicals that can send people into toxic shock or sudden catastrophic metabolism failure in the course of their being "subdued". It's bad enough that they have a license to kill, and more than a license--a mandate and a cheerleading squad--to invade, trample rights, and brutalize. It's bad enough that they now have legal authority to grab anything you own that they take a liking to and claim you must have gotten it by an illegal means, so they get to keep it for themselves... But what works hand in glove with all of that and much else to make them a thousand times more dangerous than anybody ever thinks, is just this one plain, simple fact: they're idiots.

WHAT A BUNCH OF B.S.
I DONT VOTE FOR THE STUPID BITCH!
BUT SHE WON.

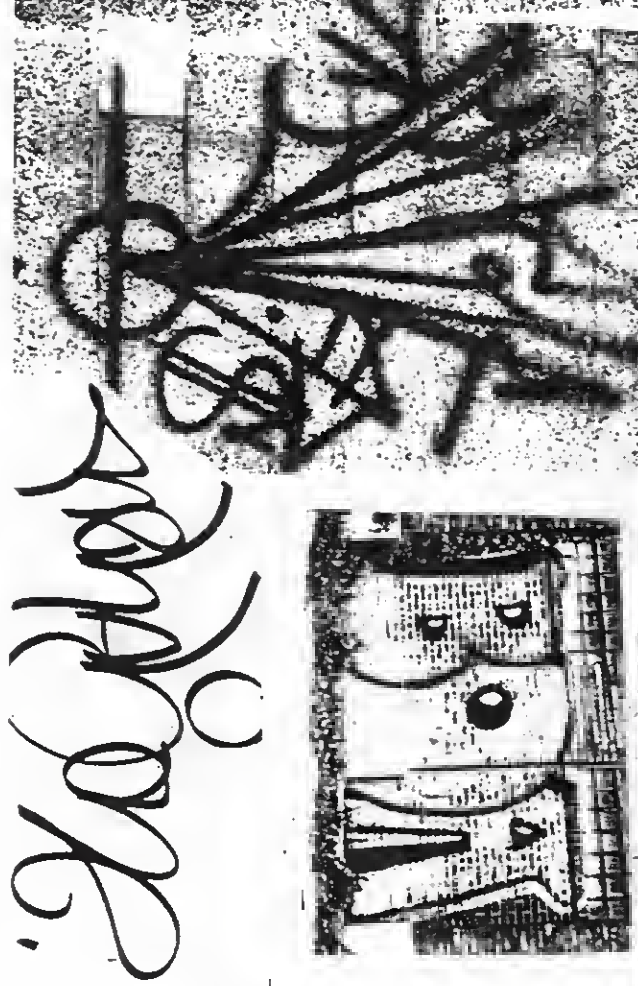

Neighborhood improvements like parks, streets and affordable housing. Good design and smarter planning for growth. Support for the arts. Strong civil rights protections. Help for local businesses to expand family wage jobs. Expanded transportation choices with more frequent and fareless transit to fight congestion.

My passion for this work has never been stronger, my love of this city and its people never deeper. You HAVE NO REAL PASSIONS. YOU ARE HORRIBLE VERA!

I would be honored to have your support in the May 16th mail-in Primary Election.

We've fought crime, gun violence, auto theft, domestic violence and graffiti.

Now that we've cut all the social programs, prisons are the new answer to unemployment, drug addiction, homelessness and underfunded public schools. They've also become a convenient source of cheap, confined labor.

NOTE: The police are the most violent GANG anywhere. Armed with dangerous weapons and an endless array of excuses and justifications, the frightening truth is that they are liable to do anything, and say anything later to cover it up if they have to.

A variety of operating principles create this deadly brutality. First, people who love control are the ones primarily attracted to this profession. Second, people exercising control over others tend to become more authoritarian as time passes. Third, police associate mainly with other police, and so become used to thinking of those whom they supposedly are there to protect as THEM—"civilians". Fourth, police operate under a mantle of fearsome righteousness bestowed by social institutions and the press, so that it is only natural for them to think of themselves as almost godlike, far above the vicious and criminal ordinary populace. Fifth, their training glorifies the "ability" to make split-second decisions—whereas, in reality, no one anywhere can do this accurately very much of the time, because thought, observation, further thought, and the reaching of decisions, requires lengthy mental processing.

What this all adds up to is that the hapless "citizen" is at the mercy of whatever misimpression crosses a cop's mind, at the same time that his mind is seriously unbalanced by his life and culture and associations.

Add to these the motivations of regular criminals—namely the temptations to steal, rape, redress insult with violence, and brutalize out of sadism, and you have a potent recipe for viciousness. Finally, to compound all of the foregoing to an almost unthinkable degree, there is the current legality of "asset forfeiture" which gives an intense profit motive to the victimization in many instances.

THAT'S WHAT THEY ARE!

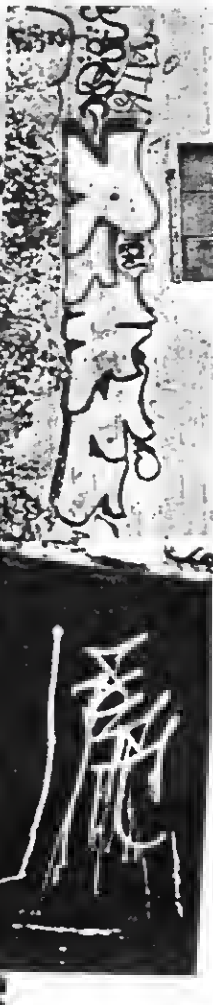

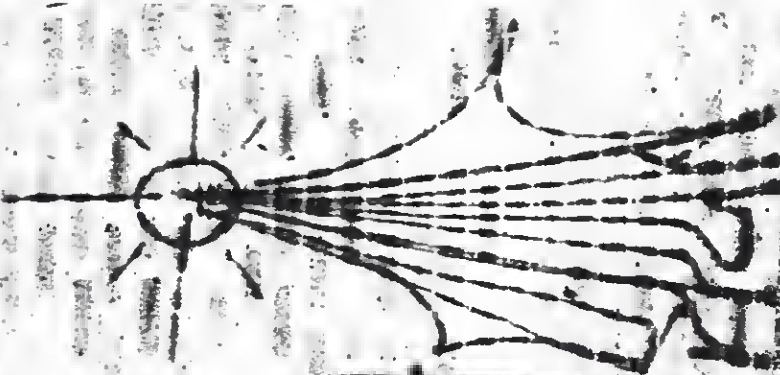

The moral of this analysis, and the following stories is: STAY AWAY FROM POLICE. Do not call them for their "help". Avoid them. Do not talk to them beyond giving them your name if they demand it. Shun them as you would Jeffrey Dahmer or any other homicidal maniac... because:

Good olde politikin:

What better scapegoat for "cracking down on crime" than graffiti? Apparently this is a contagious wave and every city's catching on. All you rich city mayors looking for another term of living lavish, here's the scheme: just simply state to the public that you're going to crack down on graffiti vandals. Trust me, this works. Take the example of mayor Katz in Portland, Oregon: She's pretty much an evil looking bitch with a phony, even more evil looking smile. Her main interests include developing Portland into one big condo and hiring a staggering amount of police officers for the size of the city. Anyway, Vera needed something to ride this election so she chose "cracking down on graffiti vandals." She also fucked over the homeless in the city, but I wont get into that now. So a bunch of kids got busted the last year and a half. Katz hyped the police to the "problem" and houses of known "tagger guys" were raided. Heroes with cell phones emerged calling in on these criminals, they had something to do now, their lives mean something, (ha ha). Katz was reelected mainly because the majority of citizens choose not to think about real issues. Most people enjoy the capitolist way of life, even if they don't really see much of the money that's generated out of such a system. People in general are just careless and stupid anyway though so what can you do? WORDS SPELLED WRONG? TOO BAD

Many other cities have loved this "issue" also. In fact, punk ass mayor Ed Koch started this whole tactic in the early eighties. Koch blew graffiti up as being the biggest of problems in New York City. In New York City.. hmmm. So he got a whole bunch of support from people that wish they had lives and they pushed it hard. Even using (paying) movie stars and athletes for anti-graffiti advertisements. And who thought New York could have a worse mayor than that, yes of course they can, his name is Giuliani. Giuliani uses the graffiti tactic amongst other outrageous issues he's pushed, claiming to be cleaning up New York. He's really just putting a baby blanket over the problems which the city will outgrow if it hasn't already.

Also on the bandwagon are the cities of Minneapolis, LA, Seattle, Philadelphia amongst others. So what better way to gain public support come election time? It can work for you. Your so called property is worth it, it's not like we're on stolen land or anything. Even if you didn't put money into stopping graffiti which will never be stopped, why would you don't give a shit. Like helping the homeless, pollution, etc... Boy, we'd never get anywhere without money being the only objective. Who cares about who stands in the way, get rid of em! I'm trying to make more money. Green paper is all there is, GREEN PAPER
